2. Step — Working the pulp: In this step, in order to make the paper material, after having fully completed the softening of its part which was separated from the bark and soaked and put in water, it is fished out from the tank and put into a pot, and, adding a little coke (being prepared by burning a poplar tree that is many years old) is boiled in water for a long time.

Note: The poplar referred to here is the thick and twisted one that is found in the desert, not the high and upright kind that is planted by the roads.

¹ In the original, the following verb forms occur in the respective sentences: 3.2 élishturulup, 3.6 ileshtürülüp, 4.1 élishturulidu, 4.2 élishturup. – The Imla lughiti (Spelling dictionary) lists ileshtürmek and Yulghun (www.yulghun.com) glosses it "to stir, mix" etc. Élishturmaq is not listed in Imla lughiti. Yulghun glosses it "to cause to take (together), to cause to take hold of each other, to cause to wrestle" (derived from élishmaq). One could attempt to make sense of this in the text, adopting the meaning "to cause to lump together, make bond" or similar, but two mother tongue speakers agree that in all these places the word ileshtürmek "to stir, mix" is in view. For the activities described, it would not make any difference anyway. So, in all the above places, the verb ileshtürmek has been adopted, and the spelling has been amended accordingly.
